Branstad attributes the virus's global spread to the inherent nature of China's political system, which was slow to react during the first days of the virus due to its reflexive tendency towards prioritizing a positive appearance over objective reality.

"I think it was really the fault of their system because nobody at the local level wanted to report the bad news up to Beijing," said Branstad. "The way their system works, people at the local level get punished if something bad happens. Unfortunately, that's the way their system works and because of that, that really made this virus situation a total disaster and led to the fact that, instead of containing the virus in China, it ended up becoming a worldwide pandemic."

Once the seriousness of the pandemic was understood, Branstad worked to evacuate the American consulate in Wuhan and bring in charter planes to get other Americans out of the country.

But where the Chinese government was slow to react to the virus, they've since taken dramatic steps to control its spread. Security protocols have become so tight that Ambassador Branstad hasn't personally met with President Xi since the pandemic began.

"Ever since the virus hit, they've just been very restrictive on who he meets with," said Branstad. "He hasn't accepted credentials from diplomats from other countries."

"If you want to go to China today, you have to be tested before you go, tested when you arrive, quarantined in a hotel for two weeks," said Branstad. "That's really curtailed travel and prevented a lot of personal contact."

Branstad announced earlier this year that he would be stepping down as ambassador and, as of his return to Iowa in early October, he is now done with the role.

The 73-year-old political figure is officially retired, but doesn't expect to stay idle for very long.

"I've already been asked by John Pappajohn to serve on the board of a company and I intend to do some public speaking and maybe do some consulting type work," said Branstad.

Branstad's tenure as ambassador marks the end of a long career in government, starting as a representative in the Iowa legislature and culminating to representing the United States to a global superpower during one of the most tumultuous times in modern history.

"It was challenging and difficult, but also a very rewarding experience," said Branstad. "I was very honored to be chosen by President Trump to represent the United States in China."

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), 1 in 8 women in the United States will develop invasive breast cancer in her lifetime. It's the second-leading cause of cancer death among women, and the leading cause of cancer death among Hispanic women. About 250,000 cases of breast cancer are diagnosed in women and 2,300 in men each year in the United States. Projections show more than 42,000 women and more than 500 men are expected to die in 2020 from breast cancer in the U.S.

All of these facts underscore my advocacy for early detection. Each represents a beloved friend or family member. Patients diagnosed with fast-growing, stage 4 breast cancer don't have time on their side. Don't let the pandemic be your excuse to put off your breast health screening. Known risk factors are aging and gender. Talk to your health care provider about other risks and family history. Delaying screening could delay a cancer diagnosis. That translates into deferred medical care, limited treatment choices and jeopardized outcomes.

Those who have studied U.S. health care statistics during the pandemic say mammograms dropped off dramatically this spring. New patient oncology visits are down. Biopsies are down. Medical professionals say there hasn't been a noticeable surge of screenings to narrow the gap. As a survivor, medical data like this raises all kinds of red flags. Quite simply, delayed detection reduces chances for effective treatment, healing, recovery and survival.

Trust your instincts. Don't convince yourself that a lump is harmless. Don't ignore warning signs. Do yourself and your loved ones a favor. Check it out to rule it out. The pandemic has put so much of our lives on hold this year. Don't let it take away your future.
